Specification

Vinification The winemaking process for Les Chant de Roses is all about preserving and enhancing the harvested grapes freshness and aroma. Grapes are collected early in the morning while temperatures are low. The grapes are destemmed and pressed in a pneumatic press in order to preserve the grape quality. Maceration takes place for a couple of days at very low temperatures. The alcoholic fermentation is slow using low temperatures in stainless steel tanks. The wine stays on its fine lees for three months, gaining its velvety texture.

Press Comments Joanna Simon, Wine of the Week, July 2025: "Gewurztraminer seldom makes it as Wine of the Week, not because I don't like it – I do – but because it's a difficult grape variety to get right, especially at a moderate price. All the more reason, then, for choosing Le Chant des Roses Gewurztraminer at its very moderate price...The 2024 is an A* example of this aromatic variety: dry, refreshing and light on its feet, with classic Gewurztraminer lychee, rose and lokum perfume and mouthwatering lime-zest vibrancy...Le Chant des Roses is all the more impressive because it comes from Languedoc, way south of Gewurztraminer's heartland in Alsace. Read more online
